NEWS FROM THE COUNTRY

CENTREVILLE WEST.
We are having very fine weather at present and the farmers are hustling their ploughing.
Parties are still raging, there being one
nearly every night.
A number from here are hunting in the
backwoods at present.
Miss Bella Perry, of Cloyne, is visiting with friends here.
M. Donnelly and E. J. Perry have entered partnership for the rest of the season. Anyone wishing to correspond with them will do so in the name of the firm.
Enterprise will please take notice.

BELL ROCK.

The residents are improving their time
during the present spell of fine weather by taking in their late garden stuff and improving their houses. H. J. Lawson is putting extensive improvements on his residence which will when finished be a credit
to the village.
Lycurgus Meek, an old pioneer, died very suddenly on the 17th ult. He was found dead in bed on that morning. His funeral took place on the 19th at the Methodist church here, Rev. Mr. Williamson officiating. The deceased leaves a widow,
two sons and one daughter to mourn his loss.

Quarterly services will be held on Saturday next, Nov. 4th, by Rev. Mr. Edwards, Kingston, and missionary meeting held by Rev. G. S. White, of Wolfe Island; will take place on the Tuesday night following, 6th prox.

Visitors:—Mr. and Mrs. J. Shire, Enterprise, and J. Connors and wife, Verona, at Mrs. H. A. Martins. Mr. and Miss York, Tamworth, Benj. Davy, Oak Flats.

NEWBURGH.

The weather is still warm and fine up to Wednesday of this week. It is raining today, Wednesday, and we hope it will long
continue as water is very low.

Mr. Henry Dunn died on Monday at a 11.50 a.m. The funeral took place Wednesday at 9 a.m.

We were sorry to hear of Mr. William Lamb's death. He was foreman in the Paper Mills here for a number of years before removing to Valleyfield.
The Epworth League of Christian Endeavor intend holding a concert in Finkle's Hall Thanksgiving night, Nov. 22nd, and have engaged Miss Alida V. Jackson, elocu-tionalist, of Philadelphia, for the occasion.
They will also have first class music and expect to give the public one of the best programmes ever yet rendered in Newburgh.

The Quarterly services were well attended
in the Methodist church last Sabbath.
Communion services will be held in the Presbyterian church next Sabbath.

Hugh Howie returned home on Saturday
from a hunting expedition and with him a fine deer.

THORPE.

Do you know where Thorpe is? Unless you are well posted in local geography, I do not believe you do. It is situated in the sixth concession of Ernestown, about midway between the noted places of Wilton
and Violet, (of course you know where they are.) The only stream of water we can brag of is Wilton Creek, which takes its rise from, well I really do not know
where, any way it flows through our town.
I often read correspondence in the paper
and wonder where in the world the places
are, so I thought I would tell you where we are. The places of note are the Post Office and Cheese Factory, and Palmer Cox's. Brownies, did not stop here as they were going round the world, neither did they cross our stream in Air Ships.
Well news is rather scarce owing to the farmers being so busy plowing, they have not had any time for gossip of course you know
the men do all the gossiping, however I did hear of a bear being seen in Mr. Levi
Dunn's orchard, but I cannot say for sure.

WILTON.

Mrs. R. N. Lapam, who has been ill for some time, is better.
Miss Maude Patterson spent last week
with her mother in Harrowsmith.
Miss Beulah Mills is visiting Miss Lill
Teedale, Harrowsmith.
Services in the Free Methodist church
have been changed from 2.30 to 7 o'clock.
Miss Alice Wallace has returned home
after spending the summer with her sister, Mrs. Topping, Elgin.

Visitors:—Miss L. Teedale, Harrow-smith, and Miss Gertrude Mills, Kingston, at H. Mills'. Nelson Irish and wife, Selby,
at W. H. Neilson's.

Quarterly meeting will be held at Violet next Sunday morning. Services in the Methodist church will be at 7 o'clock instead of in the morning. Communion services will be held in the Presbyterian church, Glenvale, next Sunday morning.
There will be no services in the Presbyterian church here that evening.

Quite an excitement prevailed in the village on Thursday morning of last week
when it was found that the body of Mrs.
Vanlunen, of Kingston, had been stolen
during the night. She had been buried only the afternoon before.

to be back to his old post after a protracted illness
of over two months.

trip.

Mr. Ward, father of Dr. Ward, leaves on Friday for St. Louis, Mo., to spend the winter with his son.

Fraser Bowerman, of Ingle, spent Saturday and Sunday with his parents in town. Fraser informs us that he gets THE EXPRESS in job lots, four or five papers at a time. It is evidently too much bother for the Tamworth post office clerks send
the paper on every week, so they wait until they get four or five issues together before they forward to destination.

Miss E. B. Freeman spent Sunday and Monday
in Kingston, visiting friends.

Mrs. Walker and daughter, of Chicago, who have been spending the summer in Napanee, are

DIED.

MAIR—At 79 Dickey Ave, Chicago, (Wednesday morning, Oct. 17th, Fred, only son of Charles and Ida Mair, aged 4 years.

A Kentucky calf, one day old performed the wonderful feat of jumping
from a cliff to the river below, a distance
of 500 feet, without rumpling a hair.

The calf was taken down the river and hailed home in a wagon, safe and sound.

It is said that glacial action has in places on the Union Pacific Road moved
the mountains down on the narrow
right of way along the Columbia River,
where the cliff rises often 400 feet
above the track, leaving now hardly a footing for the track.

The ramie fiber is tough and wears
well. It is said that in China, where it is used for making clothing, it lasts so well that children frequently wear the clothes which their grandparents wore
when children.

It is known that trees have attained
the following ages: Elm, 335 years; cypress, 350; ivy, 450; larch, 570; chestnut 500; orange, 680; palm, 650; olive, 700,
oriental plane, 720; cedar, 800; lime,
1100; oak, 1800; yew, 2800.

A New Myth.

When gods and men had multiplied,
And filled both heaven and earth,
When poets first of simple love
Began to mark a dearth,
Dan Cupid knelt—a deed unsung—
Before great Jove, with bow upstrung.
"O Father!" cried the arching god,
"Thy realm is filled with hearts
So countless that, though ceaselessly
I hurl unerring darts,
My task grows greater day by day;
So give to me a helper, pray."

A Petition to Time.

Touch us gently, Time!
Let us glide down thy stream
Gently—as we sometimes glide
Through a quiet dream!
Humble voyagers are we—
Husband, wife and children three—
(One is lost—an angel, fled
To the azure overhead.)

Touch us gently, Time!
We're not proud nor soaring wings;
Our ambition, our content,
Lies in simple things.
Humble voyagers are we
O'er life's dim unbounded sea,
Seeking only some calm clime.
Touch us gently, gentle Time!

And to—himself give thanks
That he at last could vengeance take
On Cupid for his pranks;
For oft the boy—each bard allows—
Got Jove in trouble with his spouse.
"I grant the boon," he said, "Arise!"
With smiling lips he rose
And watched while Jove from Hebe's stores
A golden goblet chose,
That brimmed with beaded blood-red wine,
And shaped it to a form divine.
"His name is Wealth," the father said.
"Dan Cupid cried in woo;
"No helper he, O Heaven's sire!"
But my most cruel foe.
O mock me not with such a mate!"
But at his tears Jove laughed, elate.
And since that day the urchin pair
In endless war have striven,
And many a tender heart have they
In fierce contention riven.
And both young souls to Hyman bring,
Though bards of none save Cupid sing.

Temperature of Deep Wells.

W. Hallock has been measuring the temperature at different depths of the "wells" of Wheeling, in Western Virginia. These wells are over 4,500 feet deep, and dry, and it was found that at about 1,300 feet the temperature was 20.4 degrees C., while close to the bottom it was as high as 43.4 degrees.

Education and Long Life.

It is a common belief that education wears out the body and invigorates the mind. Also that nervous diseases are more common among civilized nations than among the savages, because the latter without education are able to attain and maintain physical perfection. It is claimed by myself, as well as other investigators, that the educated man, the man who studies most, while not physically strong, is yet not weak and is much more able to withstand a given period of nervous tension than is the man with the excellent physique and the moderate comprehension. In fact the intelligent mind may be physically sick all through life and yet live on in this misery to a good old age, while the strong physique breaks down early, and having no mental or nervous acumen dies very quickly and only at a moderate age.

Among the lowest African tribes, currently supposed to be almost devoid of nerves, nervous diseases are very common. In fact, entire tribes are mere wrecks and only live a little time. It is safe to say that with the advent of civilization these tribes would regain physical strength. My best study has been given to the prominent educators of the world, most of whom I find physically weak, but living on and doing work daily that would kill the ordinary laborer in less than three years.—Interview in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Disastrous Appearance.

Nat Goodwin says that he was scared almost to death during his first appearance, and the story that he tells certainly gives color to that assertion.

"In 1878," he said, "I signed for the season to appear in juvenile roles at the Providence Opera House. In a melodrama called 'The Bottle' I was cast for the part of the horrid young villain who is forcing his unwelcome attention on the good young heroine. I thought I was right in it until I made my first speech, and then I discovered my mistake. In the first act I am supposed to suddenly come upon the heroine alone, and I deliver this line: 'So, I have you again, my sweet beauty! Why do you avoid me thus?' I had not more than delivered that line when the girl turned on me and let out an unearthly screech that scared me to death. It shook every line out of my head, and I stood as if I had been suddenly attacked with lockjaw. The heroine was quick to see my plight, however, and she went right on with the play, repeating my lines and then her own. As soon as I saw a chance I made a bolt for the stage door, and with all my makeup on took the next train back to Boston."—New York World.

A MODEL PUBLIC HOUSE.

A Place in the World's Great Metropolis
That is Conducted on a Reformed Plan.

Half-way up Artillery-lane, close to Liverpool-street Station, stands the model
public house of London, one that even Sir Wilfrid Lawson himself might approve of,
supposing it were possible for him to approve of a public house at all; a public house, indeed, which might be put forward as an answer to the riddle: "When
is a public house not a public house?"
The house in question stands on the right as you go up Artillery-lane from Bishopsgate. The name over the door is Williams, and the landlord is the freeholder as well. He is also a "free vintner," as have been his forefathers before him.

On the outside the house bears no trace of any particular characteristics distinguishing it from its licensed brethren.
Even when you get inside, the first glance,
beyond revealing an interior of surpassing neatness and cleanliness, betrays
nothing unusual. You and your friend
call for a glass of beer, and it is served brisk and sparkling by a quick-handed barman. As you drink it you are probably struck with the exceeding despatch
with which the constant stream of customers are served and depart.

Presently your friend says: "Have another?"

You don't want one, but you don't like to refuse him. "I don't mind," you reply.

"Two more bitters," he says to the bar-
man.

The man stares at him. "You can't have another," he says, peremptorily.

"What do you mean?" rejoins your friend, quickly, bridling at what looks like a reflection on his sobriety.

"Rules of the house," laconically re-
joins the man, pointing to a placard on the wall.

Turning you read that the following are the "rules and regulations of the house." In the preamble "customers and the public are respectfully requested to observe that this establishment is con-

A CO-OPERATIVE TOWN.

AN ENGLISH CITY WHERE EVERY-BODY JOINS IN OWNERSHIP.

No Monopoly of Property—Two Societies
With Eleven Thousand Members Each
—Cotton Companies Which Consist of Hundreds of Shareholders.

Oldham, Lancashire, although, comparatively speaking, a modern town,
and peopled almost exclusively by the working classes, holds the lead in many respects, but especially in its co-operative movements. No town in the kingdom owns as many joint-stock or limited companies, which in their turn have created other co-operative combinations.

Its co-operative stores consist of two societies, each with a membership of nearly 11,000. These societies were the pioneers of the "limited" movement in Oldham, and the cotton industry was the first business they began with. Such rapid strides has it made that Oldham
is known far and wide as the "divi."
The co-operative societies spread still further, and now, in conjunction with the societies in adjacent towns, own a large corn mill, thus sharing the profits
to be made from grinding the grain.

There are in Oldham district, in the cotton trade alone, about 150 limited companies, the majority of which have been formed since 1872, with capitals varying from £10,000 to £15,000, chiefly divided into £5 shares. These companies, seeing the profits accruing from buying the raw material, at once formed
the Oldham Cotton Buying Company, Limited, almost every company having shares; consequently it is to their own interest to do business with the company, and thus share in the profits. But they do not stop here. Seeing the large profit made by the insurance companies,
they decided to form one of their own,
and the Federative Insurance Company,
Limited, sprang into existence, each
company holding a number of shares,
and encouraging it by transferring their
insurance business to it.

It is no uncommon thing for some of the cotton companies to consist of 400,
500, and in some cases, 700 shareholders; almost all residing in Oldham.
Scarcely a family in the town but what owns shares in some cotton company or other.

The company movement does not stop with the staple trade (cotton). The butchers were not long behind, and then was formed the Oldham Hide, Skin and Fat Company, Limited, which effectually demoralized private enterprise in that direction. Even the bill posting and advertising business was invaded, the printers forming the Oldham Bill Posting Company, Limited, through it posting their own bills and advertisements.
The publicans were not left in the cold,
and very soon two aerated water companies were in full swing, each publican,
so long as he dealt with the company,
holding so many shares. These he must relinquish when he ceases to deal with them. In fact, there is no business, not even poultry farming, which has escaped
the company craze, and it is a by-word
that at one time you could have floated a dog kennel in Oldham.

CURE FOR INSOMNIA

Golf is the Game Par Excellence for the Tired Brain Worker.

A writer in The Scotsman, commenting upon the Marquis of Salisbury's recent address to the members of the British Association at Oxford, expressed regret that his lordship should be a victim to the modern and very prevalent disorder of insomnia. He went on to appeal to the medical profession for some prompt and effective remedy for that distressing ill.
"Would that the noble leader of the Conservative party would take a three months' course of golf," was the inward
exclamation of one who had himself suffered from insomnia, and was at the time
rejoicing in a succession of nights of profound and refreshing sleep. Golf (says
The Hospital) is the game for the exhausted brain-worker at any stage of his life. No junior is too young, no senior is too old to learn it; to learn it and enjoy
it. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. On the golf links at St. Andrew's the man of seventy looks fifty and the man of fifty has the appearance of thirty-five. The chief reasons for this are that

Is Cycling Healthy?

It must be most annoying to the enthusiasts of the cycling community,
says The Lancet, to read the public comments that are just now being made on their favorite exercise. The press all through the country is full of the question,
"Is Cycling Healthy?" and of the answers that spring from it. We assume that those who, for the moment, are so interested and eloquent on the subject,
have not read the moderate observations
we, from time to time, have made upon
it; if they had, there would not be the same
agitation or the same string of contradiction. This is not a case in which it can be said that in a multitude of counsellors
there is safety. It is a case where a few individuals looking on the whole of the facts with professional and unbiased mind can do the most good that can be expected. It has been our business to endeavor to master the problem in this form, and in the honest attempt so
to do we have sometimes offended the ardent cyclist, and sometimes also have run the risk of offending his ardent opponent. The facts are that the offence comes out of duty and must be borne by ourselves and those sober-minded people
who wish to see both sides of a matter that has to it two sides at least. There are three sets of opinions among those who have ridden, or do ride, the cycle as to the effect which riding has on them individually. It is clear that there are some who cannot ride; from the first the exercise does not suit them; from the first
it wears them in mind as well as in body. They try, often under disadvantaged circumstances, over-wearied with mental or bodily work, or suffering from
some symptoms of disease, and not unnaturally these discover that what they supposed might be for their benefit is just the reverse; their nervous centres are
shaken, their muscles are tired and strained,
their heart is wearied; if they have
gout or rheumatism the latent malady
comes out; in a short time they show the bad effect of the exercise, and, not liking
to say anything by halves, and not believing they could have done anything for which they were specially unfitted, they are severe in their criticism and condemn
a general system on the ground of their own idiosyncrasy. On the other hand
there are men and women of all ages
who, entering the cycling fraternity,
find a pleasure and a relief in it which
are quite phenomenal, and, though it may not last, are sufficient to make them feel that they must hold by the new requirement, patronize those who excel in it,
praise its many and obvious advantages,
and by imperceptible means become on their part warm and perhaps able, if not altogether sincere supporters of it. Lastly, there is a third set to whom cycling comes as a business. For the sake of saving time, or of carrying loads or other useful task, they train themselves into cycling labors and cycling habits—become,
without offense, cycling animals—and
find that they can perform labors otherwise impossible with comparative immunity from injury. The evidence which men of science can alone accept lies between these three sources; the last probably affording the best; and the evidence is to the effect that, excluding those who are not fitted by constitution to ride at their physical and mental expense, cycling is
as safe as any other exercise if it be taken
in a moderate and common-sense manner.

under any circumstances be made."

Then follow the rules:

"1. No person intoxicated, either alone
or in company with others, can be served
under any circumstances whatever.

"2. No person or party of persons can under any circumstances whatever be served more than once, the rule being
that he, she, or they, as the case may be,
must have left the house at least half an hour before any of them can be served again.

"3. The quantity supplied upon one occasion for consumption on the premises
not to exceed one gill of wine, half a gill
of spirits or one glass of malt liquor for each person.

"4. Persons using obscene or profane
language, talking loudly, or in any way
misconducting themselves cannot be served at any time or under any circumstances whatever.

"5. Smoking is strictly prohibited at all times and under all circumstances."

Following the rules comes a proprie-
torial note:

"The proprietors, reserving to themselves the right to conduct their own business upon any system they may deem expedient, cannot permit these rules to be broken upon any occasion with impunity. They therefore respectfully request
all persons objecting to the regulations
and not willing to act in strict conformity therewith to kindly transfer their patronage to some other establishment."

The wonderful part of it is that, in spite of the restrictions with which the landlord surrounds his customers, the house
is about the best patronized and is certainly one of the highest class in the neighborhood. Like trim Abbey Potter-son, the landlord is "a law to himself,"
and like the Jolly Fellowship Porters, the house in Artillery-lane has a character
to keep and means to keep it.

A Christmas Book.

THE publishers of Toronto Saturday
Night may well
offer to place their Christmas Number of this year
alongside anything produced anywhere. The book itself is extremely handsome. The cover
is designed by Mr. John D. Kelly, of Toronto, and is one of the most brilliant and attractive things in the way of a cover ever done in the Dominion. Three pictures, instead of one, are given away with the Number this year, and "Charmed by the Song Bird" has only to be seen to be admired. The subject is a group of children listening to the birds. It was painted by G. A. Reid (whose famous pictures, "Mortgaging the Homestead" and "Foreclosing the Mortgage," our readers will remember having seen at the Toronto Fair) and is reproduced in the cheerful colors of real life by the newly-discovered process called photo-lithography.
It is a great picture. No. 2 Supplement, "Playmates," is a French pastel and a marvel of dainty coloring. No. 3 in black and white, called
"A Difficult Trick," is the first popular reproduction of an old-fashioned steel engraving
by T. Webster. On the expiry of the copyright
The Sheppard Publishing Co. (Ltd.) at once had a plate made, of which they are proprietors,
and what formerly could not be bought for less than ten dollars they now give with the Chris-mas Number free. As a study in faces it cannot be equalled. The three pictures have been admired by all who have seen them. The leading story in the Christmas Number is by Robert Barr, recently associated with Jerome K.
Jerome in publishing the London Idler, but better known as Luke Sharp, whose writings made the Detroit Free Press famous. His story, One Day's Courtship, occupies fifteen pages. The scene is laid in Canada, and the illustrations are capital. Other stories are:
The Shade of Helen, by Francis Morison; Le
Loup Garou, by Clifford Smith; Why Johnnie Went Back, by Edmund E. Sheppard; The Passing of Baggies the Club Man, by Margaret Harvey, and An Heroic Imbecile, by Joe Clark.
There are beautifully illustrated poems by J.
W. Brougham and Reuben Butchart, Kippell Strange and James A. Tucker. There are local canvassers out if not, someone should take hold of it and our readers should see the book. It costs fifty cents (pictures and all), and is furnished in tubes ready for mailing.

perhaps hundreds, of educated men of all classes, between the ages of forty and ninety, at St. Andrew's at this moment, and they are, without exception, the healthiest and handsomest collection of middle-aged and old men the writer has ever seen. Sleeplessness, so far as the writer was able to discover in a three weeks' sojourn at St. Andrew's, is absolutely unknown to the regular golf player. One may almost say it is impossible. Living, as he does, in the open air,
and taking several hours of daily exercise without unpleasant fatigue, and with a mind constantly, but not laboriously
interested, he eats well, and so the brain
is adequately nourished. The blood, too,
is thoroughly oxygenated, and by the due
exercise of all the muscles is made to flow
evenly throughout the body without abnormal concentration upon the brain.
These are the indispensable conditions of sound and certain sleep, and these conditions are admirably fulfilled by regular and systematic golfing. Golf has the merit of being a real "cure" under reasonable physiological conditions, and with the cure of sleeplessness it brings
many other advantages, such as strengthened muscles, a toned-up heart, a vigorous appetite and sound digestion.

He's Here.

Young Autumn's in the hedges, he's hiding
everywhere.
There's scarlet in his jacket and gold dust
on his hair.
He's peekin' out o' mornings behind a veil o' mist.
That flutters in the dawning like folds
of amethyst.
He's artful, he's evasive,
But he's not the kind to scare;
October is persuasive,
And she'll catch him fair and square.
His tracks are on the maple, they gleam
like yellow gold,
And where he kissed the sumac his saucy-
ness is told;
The flower gardens fear him, and shrink
to give him room,
But little cares young Autumn, he's bound to have a boom.
He's cunning, yet he's bolder
Than a country candidate;
And as it's getting colder,
"He doesn't hesitate."
He lurks along the edges of the little
garden patch,
And watches ripe tomatoes at night he's
bound to snatch;
He's mischievous, is Autumn; he's hand-
some, for all that;
His cloak is royal purple, gay plumes
adorn his hat.
His flirtin' with the season,
He doesn't count the cost,
Nor think it any reason
Sweet summer may be lost.
The fairies fear him sadly—and love him,
arrant knave.
Oh, happily young Autumn goes on his
careless way,
While all the birds of summer are scold-
ing in dismay;
He's such a reckless rambler and such an
he's so brave.
It takes a lot of schooling
To teach a genius much,
But when he gets through fooling
The world will feel his touch.

Dummy Telephones.

"There are lots of dummy telephones
coming into use," said R. C. Owens, a New York electrical expert at the Ebbitt yesterday. "What are they? Well, in the first place, they are a necessity to a busy man who does not keep a public telephone and in another place they present an excellent means for getting rid of bores who don't intend to be bores, who don't know that they are bores, and who would resent any supposed discourtesy in a pretty emphatic way. Since the telephone came into general use and pay stations were established a class has also come into being composed of people who want to use a phone perpetually and eternally, but whose messages are not important enough to allow the expenditure of a dime. These people always want to use a phone whenever they see one,
and as they are becoming more numerous every day the dummy phone has been introduced. It looks exactly like a telephone, but is made of papier mache.
When a man asks to use your phone and you have a dummy, you just refer him
to it, and then he rings away for 'central' until he wears of getting a reply.
Of course, he thinks the instrument is out of order. He may come in at some other time and ask to use it again, but he never comes the third. Two whacks at a dummy telephone will break the biggest telephone beat in existence of ever trying to use it again."

A jury at Wabash, Ind., acquitted a conductor charged with "knocking down." The principal witness against the accused was a "spotter," and the jury refused to believe him.

Morphinomaniacs in the Medical Profession.

Dr. Jules Rochard, in The Union Medicale, draws a gloomy picture of the increase of the morphine habit in France and elsewhere. The habit, he finds, becomes incurable at the end of six months of indulgence. The fair sex and the doctors are, in his opinion, the most deeply addicted to morphine. He draws an unpleasant comparison between the behavior of each kind of delinquent. Women, he says, delight in declaring how they indulge in this vice, and show ornamental hypodermic syringes to their friends. Dr. Notet states that a lady having broken the needle of her syringe in a remote country village wounded her skin with scissors and thrust the stump of the needle into the wound, injecting herself in this manner till a new syringe arrived from Paris. Men, Dr. Rochard declares, and especially medical men, the bulk of male morphine injectors, take the greatest pains to hide their vice. Hence the precise number cannot be estimated. He believes, however, that doctors and persons associated with them, form nearly half the total of men addicted to morphine.

FLEXIBLE STONE.

What it Looks Like Under the Microscope.

It may be safely said that no specimen in a geological collection is more curious than the bar of flexible sandstone which can be bent with less pressure than that required to bend a piece of wet leather of the same size. In an article upon the subject in The Mineral Collector, we are told that "when a thin slice of the stone is looked at under a lens by transmitted light, the fragments are seen to be locked together like the parts of a sectional puzzle toy, fixed, but only loosely. The simplest way of explaining how this stone was formed is to say that the grains of sand were

CURIOUS CYCLING INCIDENTS.

Strange Things That Will Amuse the Average Wheelman.

Frequenters of athletic sports are so accustomed to the usual wheel of events, i.e., races at various distances, that a "Novelty Bicycle Race," as it was termed, would come upon them as a surprise. The race referred to took place at Leeds, last August Bank Holiday. The competitors had to ride their machines for a lap (distance, quarter mile), then dismount and carry their bicycles for another lap at a "go-as-you-please" gait, and for the third lap they had to push their machines along backwards. The event caused much amusement to a huge crowd of spectators.

Another "novelty" race is that in which the riders have to negotiate obstacles, and several of this kind have taken place in the North, the obstacles varying in most instances. The writer witnessed a half-mile race in which the men walked their machines to a point, jumped on, rode a distance to a fixed post, which they had to encircle twice, and then race away up inclined planks, and down other planks, finishing the first lap with a straight run of 100 yards. In the second lap the same obstacles had to be overcome, and it is worthy of note that no accidents occurred.

A remarkable feat was performed recently in South Wales. A cyclist undertook to ride from Caerleon to Raglan, via Usk, a hilly stretch of about 20 miles, with his hands behind his back all the way, and successfully accomplished his task.

An amusing affair took place last June at a well-known Lancashire enclosure in the country district, which is much used for training purposes. Tandem racing has only been introduced of late in the North and a couple of riders appeared at the above grounds one evening for a practice spin on a tandem safety. As they settled to their work two old men seated at a distance on a bowling green in the arena became much interested in what appeared to them a remarkably close race.

"You 'mon i' blue ull win," said one; but the other remarked, "Th' bicyclist i' black is on'y waiting fur to spurt," and these contrary opinions led to a small wager being made.

Of course, as the "mon i' blue" was seated in front, he "won," which caused his delighted supporter to launch out into sage reasons for choosing the winner, but it may be fairly assumed his

A Tale of the Sea.

Two young men of Coteau Hill, Yarmouth County, on their way home from Mark's Island on the 15th, report a remarkable incident. They saw three loons at a short distance ahead. Presently two of them arose from the water, and the third seeming to be in some trouble, they rowed to the place and were surprised to find that the bird was being slowly swallowed by a monk fish, which had caught it while it sat in the water. One wing and part of the body had been swallowed. They captured both the bird and fish.—St. John, N.B., Gazette.

track and discovered the nature of the machine. Said the losing speculator, "That bet must be off. It wud loike me saying as 'ow th' back wheels of a tram cart could catch up to th' front wheels." And that settled the matter.

Some wonderful machines have of late been startling the public. At a show at Coventry in July a giant bicycle, some 12 feet in height, was ridden, the cyclist working the cranks of the machine by means of levers. This led a Coventry firm to manufacture in a few days' time another monster machine, which I believe is called the "Eiffel" bicycle, and to exhibit it in several towns. The rider, wearing a tall hat, sits at an altitude much higher than the street lamps, and is accompanied by a safety bicycle as pilot, the contrast between the two being very amusing.

The same month there appeared to the astonished gaze of Londoners a young man gliding through the street traffic on what may be termed a "cycling-skating propeller," consisting of four pneumatic wheels about the size of dinner plates which were strapped to each foot. The semi-skates seemed very clumsy, but the manipulator thereof appeared to steer himself with much ease. In the same week a man showed himself on Holborn Viaduct riding on a single wheel, and managed the "wibbly-wobbly" machine with great cleverness. The single wheel is called a monocycle and a Frenchman recently rode one from Rouen to Paris, a distance of 132 kilometers (about 82 English miles), in 12 hours 55 minutes.

A man named Brown, inventor of a water cycle, crossed the British Channel on Aug. 29 on the machine from Newport, Monmouthshire, to Weston-super-Mare a distance of 25 miles, in three hours and a half, without great physical exhaustion.

The Dog, of Dickens.

The love of the great novelist for animals is well shown in his writings, and there is that sympathetic touch about his descriptions that only the earnest lover of his subject can command. The dog appears to have been a special favorite of his. His portraits of dogs are as fine as his portraits of men, both in fidelity and variety.

Take, for example, "Boxer," in "The Cricket on the Hearth." He is painted to the life. You may see the original any day in the week upon our country roads: tearing along in front of the cottages, chasing the poultry and pigs, dashing furiously after the cats, and yet with not a spice of malice in it all, for—as his master says and as everybody knows—it is only his fun.

As a pendant to this, consider the dog of the murderer, Bill Sykes, as he crouches under the table, winking his bleary eyes, licking his ugly lips and meditating the next assault that is to take place upon some too intrusive human calf. You may see this creature, too—and not in low neighborhoods only—fierce, sullen, ugly, but intensely faithful to the one being it owns as master, and patient to bear all ills from his hands.

Then recall the picture of "Di," the odd, shaggy, faithful mongrel; friend of Florence Dombey in her loneliness; tormented by a ceaseless suspicion of rats, and once the property of the "Young man of the name of Guppy."

In striking contrast to these comes Dora's little dog, "Gyp"—pampered, dainty mite, with all the weaknesses of pampered creatures generally—jealousy, hatred and all ill-will, but, unlike the human specimen, unwaveringly faithful to its benefactor. His comic dislike to David and to Miss Betsey Trotwood, at whom he was accustomed to growl like "a little double-bass," is amusing—and suggestive. Most pets and favorites are animated by similar motives. They detect rivals in the affections of their patrons with unerring sagacity, and their sole aim is to secure them and their path. The account of the gradual failing of the little dog and his end, preparing us for the death of Dora, is very touching.

We must not forget the Puce and Judy dogs, of which he was an attentive student, nor the dogs of the traveling showmen in "The Old Curiosity Shop." The description of these bedraggled creatures in their frills and petticoats, performing on the burly-zurly under the stern eyes of their master and divided between a sense of duty and dinner, is most diverting, but the climax is reached in the description of the behavior of the unfortunate doggie who heard that he was to have no dinner that day because he had lost a halfpenny.

In all these examples the actions and gestures of the animal under portraiture are as accurately interpreted as if they were human characters and the author knew every secret of their being.

Ode for the Marriage Season.

Sing now in festal rhyme Of Hymen's harvest-time, The happy chances When Cupid's fragrant torch Leads to the sacred porch And the bells' wedding chime Crowns young romances.

Here, whispering somewhat loud, Gathers the wonted crowd; Matrons with heart still young Happily tearful Critics of dress, avow'd, Too sibilant of tongue, And, thick the throng among, Damsels expectant still Of love, their lives to fill, Chatty and cheerful.

See, there the bridegroom waits Till at the flower-strewn gates His love descendeth, And all ears listening, And some eyes glistening, Fiction's romances pale While of a real love-tale First chapter endeth.

The choir-boys, open-eyed, Forget their psalter For raising at the bride, Childlike yet dignified, There by her lover's side, Before the altar.

Here to the shrine they bring That old pure offering Of all religions, Hallowing their first, young loves— A pair of turtle doves, Or two young pigeons.

Never since Adam's primal banns were cried By every bird in Eden's leafy minster, Has such a bridegroom taken such a bride,

So true a Bachelor, so sweet a Spinster. Hagyard's Pectoral Balsalm cures coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, and all throat and lung troubles.

OUTCAST OF MILAN

CHAPTER V.

THE OLD HOME.

Like a stream of light flashed the intelligence through the crowd that the gallant victor was Orlando Vendorme. For a few moments the word was carried with a murmuring sound, and people knew not what to do, or what to think; but by and by, when the thing was certain—when the conqueror arose, and the handsome features of the Outcast were plainly seen—then another shout rent the air. But one man, who had lent his lungs to swell the shout on the previous occasions, was silent now. Michael Totilla recognized his young master, and while others shouted, he bowed his head in thought. He had suspected this before, but he had not realized its full force until the truth was thus demonstrated to his vision.

"I don't know how it is," he muttered to himself, taking one more look at the victor, as though he would assure himself that there could be no mistake, "but thus it is. That is Orlando; and he has won the prize. If he has made his way in here without being a true knight, his head is in danger; and if, by some wonderful chance, he hath honorably won the knightly spurs, his head is in danger all the same. I must keep my ears and eyes open now."

And thus speaking, the stout artisan worked his way nearer to the dais.

As soon as the duke could recover himself, and had seen Rosabel assisted from the scene, he started back a pace, and called for his marshal.

"What ho! Bring hither your officers! This is a foul impostor! The wretch has made his way hither in disguise, and his punishment hath been spoken. Make haste!"

At this point the Count of Modena stopped down from his seat, and Frederic Von Brunt and Ludwig Eberhard moved near to the stand. Meanwhile, Vendorme had risen to his feet, and had put on his helmet, with the vizor thrown up.

"My lord," spoke Alfonso, "he is a true knight. He is no impostor."

"How now?" demanded Manfred, hotly.

"How can that be? Who vouches for his knighthood?"

"I do," replied the count.

"Then you have been deceived, and the villain hath imposed upon you; so he is an impostor, as I said. Where are the officers? Bring an axe and strike off his spurs!"

By this time a score of knights had gathered around the spot, and when they heard that the Count of Modena vouched for the knighthood of the accused, their sympathies all went with him. He had overcome Hugh de Castro and Prince Ludovico, whom they disliked; and now, if he was honest, they meant to stand by him. The prince, though lame and sore, had made his way to the dais, and was clamorous in his demand for instant vengeance upon the youthful adventurer.

"His sentence is death," Ludovico exclaimed. "The sentence was passed upon him when he was banished. It was then decreed, should he ever again be found within the limits of the city, that his head should be the forfeit."

"Aye," responded Manfred. "My son speaks truly; and so it shall be. Hugh de Castro, bring hither some of your guard, and take the culprit hence."

Vendorme did not move or speak, for he saw that Alfonso of Modena had taken up his cause; and he furthermore saw that the knights of Saxony regarded him with friendly looks.

"My lord," said Alfonso, I must speak again; and I gave you my knightly word that Orlando Vendorme hath won his spurs right honorably; and that he wears the silver cross most righteously."

"How do you know?" demanded the duke.

"Because," replied Alfonso, "I myself conferred the order upon him."

"But you had no right."

"You are mistaken. Here is my right honorable chamberlain, Marco Torquedo, who assisted me in the ceremony of initiation; and there were others of our grand order present."

"How now could you do it?" cried Manfred. "What reason had you? By what right could you elevate an outcast to our order of the silver cross?"

"By the best of all rights," answered Alfonso, drawing himself proudly up. "I am the Grand Master of the order, and the candidate was sent to me with credentials which were satisfactory; and now, sir, I vouch for his standing as a true knight."

But, said Manfred, choking with rage, he is still under the penalty. He was banished from Milan, and his return has subjected him to death."

There are laws, which you and I dare not break. A true knight of the Cross hath passage to any city in Christendom, and the gates cannot be closed against him. You cast out a poor armorer—he returns with the passport of the silver cross—and he claims passage by a right which you cannot deny."

"I do deny it!" exclaimed the duke, now fairly beside himself with passion. "He shall not escape me thus! He is a criminal, and as such, within my own dominions, I claim him for punishment. Away with him! I will hear no more!"

"Fore God!" cried Frederic Von Brunt, pushing his way nearer to the dais, "this shall not be. I espouse the cause of the gallant victor. For what he hath this day done let him harm him who dare!"

And as he thus spoke he drew off his iron gauntlet and cast it upon the ground.

"Aye! aye!" echoed many other knights; and in a moment more a score of gauntlets were lying at the duke's feet.

"Sdeath!" gasped Ludovico, who stood leaning upon the arm of an attendant; "are we to be insulted thus?"

"It is right, sir; and the duke is wrong," pronounced a quiet voice.

The prince turned to see who had spoken, and encountered the gaze of Theodore of Hartburg.

"How now, insolent boy!" cried Ludovico, firing with passion. "Put in thy tongue again with its meddling, and I'll smite thee where thou sittest!"

"Be not too sure, sir prince."

"By the gods, I know what I say; and thou hadst best beware, or thy countship will not save thee. They tell me thou art a count, and if it so be, I would advise thee to attend to thine own business."

The boy count quivered from head to foot, and once his hand dropped upon his sword-hilt; but he quickly recovered himself, and with a smile creeping over his handsome features, turned away.

Meantime the duke had had time for reflection. When he saw the knights espousing the cause of the outcast, he knew that they were in earnest; and he furthermore knew that he had no ground for opposition. The laws of knighthood had been truly laid down by the Lord of Modena, and he knew that he was bound to their obedience by a sacred oath.

"Gentlemen," he said, swallowing his passion, and assuming a yielding expression, "the heat of my disappointment has somewhat ruffled me, but I am not blind to our solemn obligations. Place yourselves in my position, and you may judge something of the feelings I must have experienced when I first knew that he who had overcome my son was an outcast from the city. But it is past. Forgive me if I have been intemperate. Sir knight," he added, extending his hand to Vendorme, "I greet thee as the true victor of the day. Wear thy prize, and see to it that you walk worthy of the high honor that has been conferred upon you. As a knight of the silver cross I bid thee welcome to our city. Now let the trumpet sound, and then we'll away to the banquet; and after that the minor sports shall succeed."

There was a blast from the heralds, and another shout; and soon afterward the cavalcade of knights, led by Hugh de Castro, started for the ducal palace. The great banquet hall was thrown open, and Manfred took his place at the head of the table, upon an elevated dais, and by his side sat Orlando Vendorme. The youth would not have been there if he could have avoided it; but, as victor of the day, by the laws of chivalry, he was obliged to sit at the commemorative feast. There were knights and gentlemen present from all sections of Lombardy; but there were no ladies. The princess who should have occupied the seat upon the right of the duke, was absent from indisposition, so that place was given to the Count of Modena.

But where were the knights of Saxony? The duke looked for them in vain.

"They could not remain," said Alfonso.

"They are on their way to the north, and have but little time on their hands."

"Never mind," returned the duke. "I shall not miss them. To tell the truth, I do not fancy these Saxons. They are churlish fellows, and meddlesome."

Alfonso made no reply to this.

The feast commenced, and, as might be expected, Orlando Vendorme was the chief object of remark. To him many praises were given, and in his honor the minstrel sang. But the youth was not at ease. He had been carried through the scenes of the list without much trial to his nerves, but at the duke's table he did not feel at home. He knew that he had many friends present; and he also knew that he had some enemies. Manfred addressed him with smooth speech, but beneath this complaisant exterior there was lurking a fire of most feelings, and he knew, too, that he was the object of other deadly hatred beside. After candles had been brought in, and the wine sail ran high, he made an excuse to leave the table, and when he had gained the court he took his way towards the dwelling he had formerly occupied. He fancied that some one left the palace directly behind him, but there were so many people moving in the streets that he could not tell whether he was followed or not. When he reached the house he sought, he stopped and knocked upon the door. The summons was answered by Michael Totilla.

"God and the holy saints be praised!" cried the honest artisan, stretching forth his hands. "O, my dear master, this is worth a year of life. Come—all is safe within. I am alone, with only my little Cinthia. You remember her. Come."

Orlando followed Michael into the house—into the room where he had spent his childhood—where he met a smiling, happy face. It was a youthful face, and upon a spry little body. Our hero knew that face very well, for it belonged to the daughter of one of his father's old workmen.

"This is my Cinthia—my wife—my companion," said the armorer with pride.

"I remember her," returned Orlando, taking her fair hand and raising it to his lips; "and I give her this salute in token of a brother's love."

"A brother in love," cried Michael; "but a father in deeds of care and counsel. Ah, my master, many is the time that Cinthia has told me that she loved you next to me. You didn't expect to find us married."

"Ah, my good Michael, I hardly expected to find you at all; but now that I have found you, I must say that the finding of you married gives me additional joy. You must have been surprised when you saw the face that bowed before the princess Rosabel this afternoon."

"Not much, Orlando; for I had discovered you before. Those blows of your axe revealed your arm. Still I was not sure until I saw your face. It is wonderful. I cannot account for it. I can hardly realize it. Cinthia and I have been talking about it."

"And now, I suppose," said our hero, with a smile, "you would like to have me talk about it."

"Certainly," replied Michael, frankly.

Cinthia expressed her desire to hear the wonderful story by quickly bringing a stool and taking a seat close by her husband.

Orlando had nothing to conceal from these true friends, so he commenced at the beginning, and gave a full account of all his adventures, from the date of his banishment up to the present time. He told how he had suffered—how he had gone hungry—and how he had even begged for bread; and then he told of meeting with the Saxon knights, of his adventure with the robbers, and of the reward which he had received from the youthful Count of Hartburg.

"The moment I found myself a knight," he continued, "or, I should say, when I was able to realize that I was a knight, I resolved to be present at this tournament. I had learned that my knighthood rendered null the edict of the duke against me, and I meant to make my mark if I could. How it has all turned out you have seen."

"It is wonderful!" exclaimed Cinthia gazing up into Orlando's face with an expression curiously struggling between love and awe.

"Aye, most wonderful," echoed Michael. "But my master, there is something curious about this young Theodore of Hartburg. He has been here since the joust was over; he was here just at sunset—he and a knight named Von Brunt—and he left the measure for a shirt of mail, which he said you would make for him."

"Yes," returned Orlando. "I promised to make him one; and he paid me in advance. I wish I could have seen him. Did he say when he should want it?"

"He asked me if I supposed you could have it done within a month; and I told him that, with my assistance, I thought you could. Then he said that at the expiration of that time he might be here again."

"There is something in that boy's character, Michael, which I cannot fathom; but he has been a friend to me, and I shall go at work at once upon the shirt of mail, that is, if I can have room in your shop."

"Hush, my master. The shop is yours."

"Not so, Michael. If you have paid your money for it, it is yours."

"And where did I get my money? Where did I learn my trade? How did I become a cunning work at our craft?"

"Never mind, my dear friend and brother," said Orlando, deeply moved by this proof of Michael's goodness; "for the present we will call the shop ours. And now, will you help me make the armor?"

"But do you mean to go at work—to work at the forge?"
"Certainly. Why not?"
"You are a knight."
"That does not make labor dishonorable to me."
"No," said Michael; and after a little hesitation, he added: "But there is another reason. There is danger in the way."
"Ha—where?"
"Do you imagine that the duke will let you rest in peace?"
"Ah, my brother, you suspect him, do you?"
"Don't you, my master?"
"Well, Michael, to tell you the truth, I do suspect that he hates me, and that he would not fail to crush me if I gave him opportunity; and I am not sure that I should stop here in Milan at present, were it not that I have promised this work. Not for my life would I fail to keep my word with Theodore of Hartburg; and you know that the armor he seeks cannot be made at any other forge. I do not believe that I could temper the fine steel in any other place. What think you?"
"I fear it is even so."
"You know it is so."
"At any rate, my master, I cannot dispute you."
"Then I must remain beneath this roof for the month to come, and we will work together. At the end of that time the boy-count may come for his armor; and then, perhaps, we shall learn something more concerning him. I think our little Cinthia will cook for me, and find me in clean linen."
"And more than that, sir," replied the true-hearted woman. "I will not only cook and wash for you, but I will watch for you. I will keep my eyes open for enemies."
"Aye," added Michael, with a shake of the head, "there may be need of it. We'll have to watch, and we'll have to be careful. Of course, Orlando, you will not think of seeking further interview with—"
"With whom, Michael?"
"Never mind. It was a foolish thought. I know you will not run your own neck beneath the axe."
Orlando Vendorme knew very well what his companion would have said; and in the season of silence that followed he bowed his head, and thought of the pale, yet beautiful face that beamed upon him when he received the conqueror's scarf.

CHAPTER VI. PLOTTING.

During three days sports of various kinds were kept up in the enclosure which had been prepared for the tournament; and as a closing scene the duke gave a grand feast of meat and wine to the populace. Of course there were loud cheers for Manfred of Milan, and many an oath was taken in his name.

It was past midnight of the last day of the carnival, and the sounds of revelry were nearly hushed. Manfred had not yet retired. He had just come in from the streets, where he had been walking in disguise. The prince Ludovico was with him. The prince had not been in the street, however: for he terest in the outcome of what was to come. And who is that boyish count that calls himself Lord of Hartburg? Why was he here with his train of knights? Why did he too take such an interest in Vendorme? These are the things that puzzle me."

"And they puzzle me as well, son. But they do not frighten me. I will solve the problem as Alexander solved the Gordian knot. Now go to your bed, and obey the instructions of your physicians."

Ludovico left the apartment without asking any more questions, and in a little while after he was gone Sir Hugh de Castro entered.

"Good, my captain," cried the duke. "I have been waiting for you. Have you left everything?"

"As quiet as I can desire, my lord," replied de Castro. "The streets are in order, and the wineshops are closed."

"Good. Be seated, sir, and listen to me."

Hugh de Castro had been Manfred's companion almost from boyhood, and he was just the man for a tyrant's tool, bold, daring and unscrupulous, with just ambition enough to fill the place he held, he was willing to do anything to please the man who kept him in a station of authority and power. Had he been more intelligent, he might have proved a dangerous friend for his master, but he knew his own weak points, so he did not aspire to rule.

"My captain," said the duke, after the knight had drunk a cup of wine, "what think you of the youngster that overcame you at the tournament?"

De Castro bit his lip and clenched his fist.

"He is a stout rascal, my lord."

"Aye—I know that, but I would discover what your opinion is touching another matter. Have you seen him since you left the list?"

"I caught a glimpse of him through the shop window this evening, my lord, as he was at work at the bench."

"Ah—that's it, my captain. How like you the idea of the champion of our city working at the forge?"

"It is humiliating."

"Of course it is."

"But I can't see why he does it," said de Castro. "There is something mysterious about the whole affair."

"Would it hurt you, my dear Hugh, to know that this upstart champion was—once more banished from Milan?"

"No—indeed it would not. But, my lord, how can you do it? Has he done anything—"

"Fshaw! you don't understand me. I mean—how would you like to see him banished from this earth?"

"Ah—now I comprehend. Oh—I see it now. And, my lord duke, you touch me in the right place."

"Good, my captain. I have thought of this thing and I have concluded that it must be done, and, furthermore, I have wondered who would help me in the work."

"Hold, my lord. You need wonder no more. Here is my hand. Let me but have your dual order, and the thing is done."

"Don't misunderstand me, de Castro. I mean not to issue my edict. The work, if done at all, must be done so secretly that the story shall never be told. There must be no arrest—no noise. He must be slipped off as quietly as possible."

Hugh de Castro poured out a cup of wine, and when he had drunk it, he said, as he put the cup down by way of emphasis:

"I understand you, and it shall be done; and in one week from this time those who seek for Orlando Vendorme shall seek in vain!"

"And now," cried Manfred, rising from his seat, "I can seek my couch in some manner of comfort. A fitting reward awaits thee, my captain, when the deed is done."

Orlando Vendorme went at work in the old shop on the very next day after the tournament. He had promised the young lord of Hartburg that the armor should be made; and, under all the circumstances of the case, he could not hesitate. He felt that he was running some risk, but he would not allow the fear of his enemies to deter him from fulfilling his obligation. He went at his work in the forenoon, and before night he had succeeded in forming a pattern of chain to suit him. He produced some fine wire so subtle that it yielded almost like threads of gold when bent or twisted, and yet of a temper so keen that a sword could not cut it. Thus successful in the outset, he flattered himself that he should produce for Theodore of Hartburg a suit of mail utterly impenetrable to mortal weapon.

"It is the finest steel I ever saw," said Michael, after he had put the wire to the test. "That is something which I could never do."

"But you shall do it, Michael, before this armor is finished—so that when I wear it, my city will know me no more. And so, sweet Rosabel, farewell!"

A little while after thus speaking the youth stood with his arms folded upon his breast, and then he turned from the spot. He had come near to the gate, and was about to pass through, when a man, coming from without, ran full against him.

"How now, dog?" cried the stranger, starting back a pace. He was a huge powerful fellow, topping our hero by almost a head, and swelling out about the shoulders to the proportion of a giant.

Orlando could not be mistaken in the person. It was a noted bravo named Matteo—a fellow stained with a thousand crimes, but who had for the past few years served Hugh de Castro in the capacity of guard-man.

"How is this, villain?" the fellow continued, with a fierce oath. "Why do I find you lurking about this out-of-the-way place? Get thee hence, or I'll spit thee upon my sword, and serve thy body up to the fishes of the Savaio!"

Without stopping to consider, Orlando resented this right promptly.

"If you have business to intercept peaceful citizens, then know that I am exempt from your oversight; but if you seek a quarrel, you had better consider upon it before you begin."

"Ho, ho, my boy, you will oppose an officer of the guard, will you? Take that for your trouble." And as the bravo thus spoke, he struck the youth in the face.

Quick as thought Orlando sprang back, and drew his sword.

"Villain!" he shouted, "if you push me further, you shall rue it!"

"Ho, ho,—you draw you sword upon the guard, do you? Now, you shall find how fine a thing it is! Mind,—you have attacked me—you drew your sword first—you invite the conflict."

In a moment it flashed upon our hero that this fellow had been set on to work by his superiors, and that a deadly conflict had been meant from the first. He now saw through the warning of Cinthia; and he understood the business of the stranger who had passed him on the road. This was a plot of his enemies, and its meaning was, that he should die.

"I attack no man," he said; "but I shall defend myself to the utmost. I know you; and I know your business."

Orlando had prepared himself for the battle, and was all ready to meet his huge opponent, when he was startled by beholding two or three armed men emerge from the shadow of the palling; and as near as he could judge from the glimmering of their armor, they were companions of the bravo.

Many are the attempts to identify the forbidden fruit. Some say it was the fig, others the grape, others, again the pomegranate; but the most "Arabian Nights" description paints it as an ear of wheat, which looked like a ruby and was as big as an ostrich egg; and grew on a tree whose trunk was like gold, its branches like silver and its leaves emerald.

Our first parents were expelled about 3 o'clock of the afternoon of Friday, the 10th of May, having resided in Eden seven years, two months, two weeks and three days. Adam was banished to Ceylon and Eve to Mecca, and they remained apart 200 years. Adam according to some accounts, spent half his time weeping, with his face to the earth; others, less charitably, aver that his solitude was cheered by Lilith, who resumed her former relations with him.

When he repented and rejoined Eve, he begged that something might be given him from the happy garden of innocence which he had forfeited and lo! in answer to his prayer, three mighty archangels were sent to him—Michael, bringing gold, Gabriel frankincense, and Raphael myrrh—mystic gifts, in after years associated with the offering of the Magi, whom early Christian tradition identified with Enoch, Melchisedek and Elias.—All The Year Round equal to any ever made by Roderic Vendorme or his son. How will that please you?"

"So well," replied Michael clapping his hands with joy, "that I shall be the happiest man alive. When I can make a network like that which you now possess, I shall be able to do that which no other armorer in Milan, save yourself, can accomplish."

"That is even so," returned Orlando. "And you shall have the first secret this very night."

Michael Totilla bent himself with careful attention to the instruction of his young master, and before the expiration of another day he was able to compound the ingredients necessary to the tempering of the steel, and practice would soon perfect him in the work.

Orlando had been at work nearly a week at his forge without having once left the house. He had worked thus steady for two reasons. First, he wished to get the suit of mail done as soon as possible; and, second, he had no desire to be gazed upon by a curious multitude, and troubled with impudent questions, from which latter cause he had kept the house. But finally, when the steel was all fashioned, and ready for weaving into the intricate network, our hero concluded to take a stroll through the city. It was in the evening, and Michael had gone out to do some purchasing for the larder.

"Are you going out?" asked Cinthia, as she saw Orlando buckling on his sword.

"Yes, my sister. I think I have been shut up here about long enough; and it is time that I had some fresh air. You won't be lonely, will you?"

"No, no, it isn't that, sir. I was thinking that you might wait until Michael came back; and then he could bear you company."

"Ah," returned Vendorme, with a smile, "you don't understand my turn of mind. I want to study and reflect; and so I prefer to walk alone."

"But, sir," pursued Cinthia, with evident concern, "you don't understand any better than I do. There may be danger if you venture out alone."

"Danger!" cried Orlando. "Danger in the streets of Milan? Poo! impossible."

"Ah, my brother, you do not reflect. You have enemies in Milan; and they are high in power, too. And I think I have seen strange men lurking about our house of late. I know I saw one last night."

"Never mind, Cinthia. I thank you for your kindness of thought; but I cannot have myself up here like a frightened criminal. You see I have my good sword for a companion, and while this is by me I shall not fear any lurking enemies. If Michael comes back before I do, you may tell him that I have gone to walk by the Savoso. Keep up a good heart, sweet sister, and don't let the ghosts and goblins come in to disturb you."

Cinthia tried to smile, but the effort was fruitless; yet she spoke cheerfully and urged Orlando to keep his eyes open for danger.

As our hero left the house he cast his eyes carefully about him, but saw nothing to attract particular attention. There were several persons in the street, but they seemed bent upon business of their own. The night was clear and calm, and the stars were out in all their glory. There had been a northerly breeze during the latter part of the day, so that some of the coolness of the far off Alps was mingled with the atmosphere. Slowly and thoughtfully the youth pursued his way, and he reached the neighborhood of the eastern river he turned to the left, and walked towards the old tilting-ground. As he was walking thus, with his head bowed, he heard footsteps behind him, and on turning he saw a man approaching. He had no desire to meet any one who might recognize him, so he turned away from the direct path, and walked more slowly. The man behind came up and passed on, turning when close by our hero and regarding him with evident interest; but he did not stop; he only slackened his pace a little, and then moved on, and was soon out of sight beyond a clump of dead-ers.

With no further thought of the passer, Vendorme pursued his way until he finally reached the scene of the tournament. The gates of the list were open, and he entered, and moved towards the platform where the duke had sat. When he reached the spot where he had knelt to receive the conqueror's scarf, he stopped, and bowed his head upon his bosom.

"Alas!" he murmured, "and thus the strife must end! O, Rosabel, thou hast crossed my path like a brightly flashing star, blinding me for the while to all else of earth; but thou canst no more bless me—no more beam upon me. Into my solitude of life I will carry the remembrance of thy sweet face; and my soul shall be cheered by the

The concert given in the lecture room of the Western church on Thursday evening of last week by Mr. Howell, of Kingston, was a highly successful and enjoyable one. Mr. Howell was assisted by the Misses Silver, Walker and Greenwood, of Kingston, and Messrs. Jewell and Rockwell and Miss Lane and the Misses Allen, of Napanee. Mr. Howell and his pupils rendered several difficult selections of music on organ and piano with good effect. Mysterious Death of Mr. Dunnel.

Mr. Dunnel, sen., an old resident of the township of Alnwick, met with his death in a very peculiar manner on Monday 29th Oct. The old man made a business of fishing in Rice Lake, on the shore of which he lived. On Monday he went out as usual in his canoe, and a few hours later the son noticed from the shore the old man's boat some distance out, and apparently empty, which fact give rise to such uneasiness that young Dunnel procured another craft, and went out to investigate, when he was horrified to find his father's dead body lying in the bottom of the canoe, which was half filled with water. The peculiarity of the death will no doubt warrant the nolding of an inquest, when some light may be thrown on the mystery.

The New Organ.

The new organ for the Western church came on Monday last, and workmen have been engaged all the week in taking down the old organ and erecting in its place the new one. A few words regarding the newly purchased instrument will no doubt be read with interest. The organ has been in use in the Church of the Messiah Toronto, for the past eight months, being placed there temporarily by Messrs Warren & Son in order to make more room in the factory for other work. The tone and workmanship of the instrument are all that can be desired, being pronounced by competent judges as first class in all particulars, as will be seen by the specifications which we give below, almost every shade of tone is represented, and the organ will be capable of producing a very great variety of combinations. The following is the specification.

The church is to be congratulated on the possession of such a fine instrument, and the congregation may reasonably expect a much better musical service than was possible with the former instrument. We believe the people of Napanee will show their appreciation of the enterprise of the church in bringing into our town an instrument equal to many in the churches, and far surpassing anything we have ever had, by attending largely the opening recital, and contributing thereby something toward the purchase of the instrument. The Opening Recital and Concert will take place on Friday, Nov. 9th, and will be conducted by Prof. Lewis Browne, of Toronto, one of the finest organists in America, and a specialist in organ recital work. Tickets will be out early next week and are placed at the small sum of 25cts. Let us suggest that everybody buy a ticket and encourage to that extent at least, the purchase of this fine Pipe Organ.

Important Insurance Case.

A special to the Globe from Renfrew says. The conclusion of the first stage in what promises to be a record insurance case has been reached. William McCaw of Montreal, agent of the Mutual Insurance Company of New York, charged W. J. Fair of Kingston, agent of the North American, before Magistrate Eady with allowing a rebate of $10 on an insurance of over $5,000, contrary to the insurance corporation act of 1892. Both agents were trying to insure the members of the firm of Logan Bros., who were withdrawing from another company in which they had an insurance for the benefit of the firm. Fair got the risk but agreed to allow Thomas Logan, the business manager, a rebate of $5 on each of the first and second premiums payable. The defence contended that this was not an inducement to insure but simply a present after the insurance was effected. Another point in dispute was whether the insurance was an individual one of $3,000 for each partner or really an insurance of $6,000 for the benefit of the firm. The evidence was heard last week, and yesterday the Magistrate decided that the $10 was given as a rebate, that the insurance was really one insurance of $6,000; and that consequently Fair had committed a breach of the act. He imposed a fine of $20 and costs, to be paid forthwith, or one month's imprisonment. Fair will appeal.

Hallow'een.

Hallow'een passed off quietly in Nanapanee. Some appropriate and inappropriate signs were painted on the plate glass fronts on Dundas st., a few fences and small buildings knocked down, and the usual number of gates carried away painfully apprised a few of our citizens on Thursday morning that the small boy had been around enjoying himself.

Important to Ladies.

The ladies of Nanapanee and the public in general will be delighted to know that Miss Byrnes & Co. are representing the world's Champion Dress Cutting System of Prof. Mme. O. If the ladies want to see a perfect garment, one that they will go into ecstasies over, they should call at Miss Byrnes & Co's parlor on Dundas street, opposite the Campbell House. Seamless garments on exhibition; high class dress-making. Pupils wanted. Miss Byrnes takes great pleasure in introducing Miss Carr to the ladies of Nanapanee, who has held first class positions as dress-maker in Toronto. Orders taken for the Artistic Health Corsets.

Ruri Decanal Conference.

The Ruri Decanal Chapter of Lennox & Addington met in St. Mary Magdalene's church, Nanapanee, on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. There was a representative gathering of delegates from the various parishes in the County, and the papers read and discussions elicited will no doubt do much to promote the welfare of the church in this Deanery. The rendition of the full choral evensong, on Tuesday evening, and the choral Litany, on Wednesday evening, by the choir of St. Mary Magdalene was above criticism and the choir are deserving of praise for their excellent singing. As a committee has been appointed to prepare a full press report, which will appear in our next issue, we refrain from giving an extended notice this week.
